WAR-TIME HEALTH COLUMN STUDY SYMPTOMS— SAVE DOCTOR'S TIME

By DR. THOMAS D. MASTERS
Written for NEA
When and how to call one's doctor to the home is a problem of increasing importance in the present shortage of civilian medical help. Although occasionally necessary, the visit to the house is the most inefficient duty that the physician performs, as well as the most time-consuming. He can carry with him only the minimum in equipment, and the time required to make home visits might more effectively be utilized in seeing a number of equally sick people in the office.

All such factors in the end work to the disadvantage of the patient, and must in some way be handled satisfactorily both for him and the physician, if the present emergency is to be met. USE COOL JUDGMENT

It does not take actual medical moment for calling upon the doctor, but it does require a reasonable amount of common sense. A few emergency circumstances are obvious, and on other occasions it is usually possible to get in touch with the physician by telephone and give him an opportunity to exercise his judgment about where and how the patient may be taken care of.

He may be able to advise on the telephone, or he may order the patient to the hospital. Or he may find that it is safe or necessary for the patient to come to the office, where the proper equipment for diagnosis and treatment is maintained.

Pers. prompt many requests for the doctor to come to the home — often fears that may readily be allayed by the exercise of a little restraint and a consultation with the doctor at the time the call is made. It is always wise for those attending the sick person to acquaint themselves with a clear list of the patient's complaints, and to take his temperature.

With these objective data, they can give the physician a pretty clear picture of the matter in hand. The physician then can decide what would be the best method of meeting the emergency, and proceed to do so. Fortunately, very few medical ailments cannot afford to wait a short time for diagnosis and treatment, and during the interim, arrangements can be made as to where the examination may be made.

NATURAL BEAUTY NOT NEGLECTED

4-H Club Members Though
Food Conscious Improving Homes, Farms

Despite a heavy schedule of work to help increase production of foods and conserve vital materials to meet wartime needs, 4-H Club boys and girls in Connecticut and throughout the nation are determined to improve their home surroundings with natural beauty for the duration and for the peace to follow.

Their well-laid plans of beautifying home grounds include planting trees, shrubs and flowers, removing unsightly old buildings, repairing fences, repainting houses and barns, and placing wind breaks to prevent soil erosion.

The rural youth will enter their records of achievements in the 1942 National 4-H Home Grounds Beautification activity to compete for awards provided by Mrs. Charles R. Walgreen, Chicago horticultural enthusiast. These recognitions of outstanding accomplishments are based upon county, state and national levels, and include medals, gold watches and all-expense trips to the National 4-H Club Congress in Chicago, respectively.

This activity will be conducted, along with other 4-H wartime projects of production and conservation, by the Extension Service of State Agricultural Colleges and the U. S. Department of Agriculture co-operating. Full details are obtainable from county 4-H Club agents.

Fish from the United States and Canada have been planted in famed Lake Titicaca in Bolivia and Peru.

Axis Subjects Carry Cross of Shame, Sorrow

Christians Throughout World Must Have Sympathetic
Understanding of Their Plight, Says Rev. Dr. Walker

I make bold to say that as Christians meeting around the Communion Table we must be mindful of fellow Christians in Italy, Germany and Japan," stated Rev. Dr. John C. Walker, Second Congregational Church pastor, yesterday morning in his sermon entitled, "The Bread of Heaven."

Dr. Walker said in part: "Edmund Burke said long ago that you cannot indict a whole nation. I am sure that there are countless Christians in the Axis countries who are bearing a heavy cross of shame and sorrow in these days. We know that many have suffered the penalties of persecution and imprisonment, yes, and some death, at the hands of their own governments, because they have dared to obey God rather than man. I dare not break my fellowship with Kagawa and Neimoller and innumerable unknown Christians who pray to God in the name of the same Christ, who cherish the common Christian fellowship, who look in prayer and with deepest spiritual yearning for the triumph of such a justice as will make an enduring peace possible. I want to pray a special prayer in my own heart for those Americans of Japanese blood who suffer heavy penalty and carry a heavy burden in these days and all without any want of loyalty on their own part."

Some time since I read a very moving account of an All Saints' Day vesper service in Ely Cathedral in England. The account was so vivid and the reaction of the visitor was so moving that I could picture the scene quite clearly. Ely Cathedral as the account of the visit suggests is not the grandest or the most famous of cathedrals of England. Like some other cathedrals it was built over many centuries and in this case the sense of unity was somewhat obscured. You have several different patterns and plans represented. The cathedral is quite manifestly the work of several different architects and the plans were radically altered from time to time. I remember that quite distinctly. But this unusual diversity and lack of unity has its own charm and message. The visitor from abroad was singularly impressed by that vesper service. He says that when at the close of the service the singers came out of their choir stalls and passed through the screen out into the gloom of the nave singing that brave, inevitable hymn of the hour and the day, "For all the saints who from their labors rest," as the recession passed by him and the music died away in the distance, the great cathedral seemed tenanted by the generations gone and the generations yet to come. It was as if humanity, Christian humanity, had gone marching by.

Although our visitor didn't happen to say, I suspect he saw bishops and archbishops, deans, canons, curates of bygone days in that mystic recession. I am sure that he called the images of kings and nobles, knights and squires, gentle ladies and their attendants, humble yeoman and their wives, who in other ages attended services and took communion in Ely Cathedral. He must have seen Crusaders in their armor and quiet country gentlemen, dons and students from nearby Cambridge of other generations.

Jesus Christ, the same, yesterday, today and forever. Our fellowship is in heaven. We are one with the saints. We are more than weary lonely pilgrims, we are part of the great army of God. Love has forever. Christian love is the pledge of nobility and the greatness of men. "If any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever."
